The Tiger Woods saga continues following more details of his string of affairs. He has just announced on his website that he is "taking a hiatus from golf" and does not know when he will return. At the same time, his sponsors are pulling back from supporting him. They are worried his now less-than-squeaky-clean image will no longer help sell their products. The global management consulting company Accenture has removed some of its images of Woods from its website. Experts believe Accenture may find it difficult to keep its "Go on, be a Tiger" slogan following revelations about Woods' many girlfriends. It seems Nike, one of Woods' biggest sponsors, is sticking with their man, for now.

Woods' life and career turned upside down on November 27 when he had a minor car accident near his home. He needed hospital treatment for cuts to his face. Newspapers soon reported his wife chased the car and hit it with a golf club. The media followed this with speculation about a number of extramarital affairs Woods had. More than ten women are currently telling newspapers the story of their relationship with him. The golfing great said: "It may not be possible to repair the damage I've done, but I want to do my best to try...After much soul searching, I have decided to take an indefinite break from professional golf. I need to focus my attention on being a better husband, father and person."
